Morally speaking, ernelty to animals is an indication of character almost worse than ornelty to men. There is a brutal hardness of disposition diplayed in bullying defenceless creatures which is a qualification for the worst crimes; a love of animals, like a love of children, is generally characteristic of the most amiable natures, and its antithesis is one of the most unfasturable symptoms. A boy who begins by torturing a cab is in as fair s road to the gallows as be can very well strike will multrent his donkey will also heat his wife. We should therefore punish cruelty to the brute creation, in spite of any sneers about sentimentality, both in defence of our dumb dependents. and because it naturally leads to other crimes more serious, if not many disgusting. But, grant-

"masequently the number of guines-pigs in ex-istence would decline. We should, as sincere edly. friends: recommend bim rather to encourage than to probibit the importation of boss, and to sub mit to his fate with that decency and courage which becomes men and guines-pigs who have lived their allotted time in peace and happiness. The would-be defender of his race should pass from the snake-house to the pen where guinespice para their itmuquil existence, and reflect that to do stroy the one would imply breaking up. the happy home of the others. But we admit that this is only one, and the amallest part, of the question. We have to consider the effect upon spectators, and to ask whether, admitting that a sportsman may be humano after putting innumerable beasts to death in fair fight, a sight-keer can possibly preserve the fine edge of his sensibility who has seen warm-bloode'l animals enguiphed by scaly serpents. War, with all its faults, has something. entubling about it; but no one now argues that it is a good thing to have a taste for executions. And here we must admit that the anokes have a taste for at least a universal prejudice weighing against them. We soknowledge, a tie, which is generally weak enough. Instead of considering the rabbit as a possible dinner (though, by the way, a very nasty one), we think of him as more or less a mammal and a brother. As we see the hamp which was a rabbit moving slowly down the snake's throat we feel that sort of loathing which the piccure excites in the Travailleurs de la Mer. It is the low, slimy organization, belonging to the horrors and tragic influences of creation, which is destroying the higher: chaos and deformity gain ing the upper hand, and we naturally shiver at the process. Yet, admitting that much may be said against snukes, it seems to be really a false sentiment : it amounts to Manicheeism-to the theory that God made the guinea-pig and the devil the bon-constrictor-a doctrine which we. believe to be distinctly beterodox. The make certainly takes the terrible part of the preaching which we listen to on Sundays at the Zoologic Gardens; he suggests to us some of the un-

Now, to remove the serpents would be to take the vinegar out of the salad; we should spoil the harmony by reall animals who dare to commit a breach of the one for weeks.
